I miss you pop, I wish we could go on have lunch. You were a part of my life, often having conversations with you about various aspects of life just like a father you were to me in many ways. I didn't have to use a signature to indicate who you were to me. I never had to nor did you ever have to be introduced as to what your role was in my life." My dad" to differentiate one from the other like some people often did. You weren't a piece of property and I never had to remind people just who you were period that don't know you were a father to me. One of the great things about having a father sometimes you can have many of them I never look down my nose at you when I was disciplined that so often happened as a Young Man growing up. As the man I am today I have no reasons to feel despair for any of the tough lessons I learned. And to this very day I always accept it your knowledge about life. I often spoke of the tough lessons that I learned having you as a father not truly understanding the magnitude of the lesson as a child it became full circle as a man and gave me ratification as well as bumbling me with appreciation. Now that you've gone and left me here I will always respect you as a man home talk me the tough lessons of life. And now that you have gone to that beautiful place in another dimension you will never ever hear me speak your name in discontent, hate or any negative aspect out of respect
