“ Martin Patton, who he was to me

In my eyes, he was such a beautiful person and a great man. No one could sensationalize or retell a story quite like Marty (LOL) but on the other hand, no one was more patient, compassionate, supportive, selfless, loyal or fun. His laughter brought mine on too. Though he enjoyed talking, he could easily take a back seat and become an intense listener, how you felt mattered.

Marty, I called him the friendly giant with a huge heart, a people lover who was always available to lend a hand, a man who loved his family, doted on his kids and grandson, and valued friendship. He understood humanness makes us all imperfect. Therefore, forgiving came easily for him, because he latched onto a person's best qualities. He gave his contagious smile freely and whenever I was down, his presence could lift my spirits.

In this narcissistic world, Marty managed to stand amongst the few, the few who can unselfishly put others first, no strings attached.

Marty exemplifies the oxymoron that money cannot make you rich, rich in values and love and caring and having a genuine concern for others. Marty, a simplistic man who simply desired to leave a legacy of precious memories with those who knew him well.

Marty . . . knowing him was an honor, establishing a relationship with him was a gift, maintaining that relationship was invaluable. My Old Friend will forever live nestled in my heart, roaming in the memory bank of my mind. And whenever, I'm overcome with the grief, I'll take a moment, grab a seat and recall our cherished memories that are etched into my soul.

*R.I.P., loving you always,
Laurie Lane*
